railway building development. The new bridge, assembled at the near by railway station together with the track, has been brought on two cars to the site. With ropes, fastened on masts it has been lifted above the old bridge, which was then transversely pushed to a simple wooden scaffolding. The new bridge /35 metres long and weighting 120 tons/ was then brought down to its definite position on the pillar beds. The railway track was connected, final load test made, and regular traffic was restored.

The new assembling method saves building a costly scaffolding, greatly shortens the assembly time and the period of traffic stopage on the line, last not least it saves much difficult labour.

- 102.945 Ždár on the Sázava, formerly a poor little town on the Bohemian-Moravian Highlands is in the peoples Czechoslovakia rapidly transforming into a modern beautiful city. The working people of Ždár live a new happy life. New living quarters have been built there, new plants, perfect health centres. The new settlement Stalingrad has 3.500 inhabitants as far and by planned building their number will increase to 18.000 to the end of 1960. Also public buildings are built such as filtration station, water reservoir etc. Besides the Park of Culture and rest a new stadium, a hotel, a nursery, a creche and schools will be built. The working people of Ždár build also 45 nice family houses for themselves and in 1955 further 25 - 30 family houses will be built. The whole new city set into a frame of parks and gardens, will make a beautiful modern new city.
- 19 The new yard of the machine works and foundries of Ždár is not to be compared with the former dark factory yard. With the newly planted trees and flowers it is much more a garden now than a works' yard.
- 6 The working people of the Ždár machine works and foundries produce for home market as well as for export. Turner Karel Novák controles the lather on which the cog-wheel for excavators D 500, designed for Korea is turned.
- 25 In the new Stalingrad settlement new streets and parks are built.
- 15 Jaroslav Kaucner, smelter of the Ždár machine and foundry works lives with his family in a nice modern flat. In the evening he controles the home-exercises of his daughters, while his little son wants to see the new fairy-tale book.
- 18 Mrs Kaucnerová, wife of the smelter Jaroslav Kaucner, is also employed in the machine and foundry works of Ždár, and for several times already she has been awarded the title of an exemplary worker. Moreover she is an exemplary wife and mother. Photo shows: Mrs. Kaucnerová preparing dinner for her family, is listening to the radio, she has been presented as an exemplary worker.
